

<https://writerssa.org.au/>

hi.

I don't know how to kick this letter off to you because I don't really know how it would end.

There will be this one girl that will break your heart but you will learn to get over her as the time goes on.

this is good bye for now—
The Older You

Our brother will stop being a big ass to you because he got himself a girlfriend and she'll teach him how to not hate you.

Oh, and our dad will make a joke about the gay thing when ever he can.

(trust me our Mum will give you lifts to school so that she does not have to hear about you complain about it)

-you may get death stares from the people, and everyone else that live there. And when you do get into town to go to school people will act the same way that those kids on that bus do. But, once you see that one group of people are all full of shit the thought leaves your mind.

You have already been through so much and you will go through so much more, but even with those kids at school making life hell for you, it will get better.

Maybe just know that when you're on that dreaded bus - but that group of friends will be there to show you that you don't have to (especially the one with the long fluffy hair that he won't get trimmed and some people think he's your brother).

You will learn how to come out to our parents and yes it will be an odd shower thought on a Saturday night, and our parents won't care, but will be fine with it.

You'll finally come to terms with the other thing about you and tell all your friends and one of them will help you work out a name that you like, and your teachers will use it when your parents aren't around.

Those girls that bullied you growing up might start rumors about you and about who you are, but not only will you have that group of people, but you will also have a few of the most amazing teachers that are on your side and will help you out.

You will get your heart broken a lot (like I mean a lot) but you don't need to be taken every moment of your life to be liked by other like those bullies told you. Life might and will make everything hard for you to the point of not wanting to be here anymore and to the point of thinking you have to be like everyone else to be able to be happy.

